Dear friend,

We hope you and your families and communities are staying safe and well in these difficult times.

Keeping informed

In the absence of any upcoming events to look forward to, we are sharing with you a list of resources and reading material to help the economics community at this time.

Helpful resources for managing the coronavirus pandemic

In addition to official health information, WEN has collated the following professional resources to help our community through the challenge of the current COVID-19 pandemic. This includes online resources to help our academics and teachers quickly switch to virtual classrooms and online teaching, resources to help workers convert to working-from-home, and weblinks to help with home schooling.

Our thanks to WEN for supplying this list of helpful resources.

University of Sydney Global Perspectives Podcast

From a team of economists who explore economic policy from an evidence-based, global perspective. These podcasts provide an opportunity for the team to discuss relevant issues in the analysis of economic policy with researchers from central banks, other policy organizations, and academics working on macroeconomic and trade policy-related research.
